Dear Mrs. Spain:

It is a distinct pleasure for me to submit the nomination of three outstanding employees of the Central Intelligence Agency for the 1976 Federal Woman's Award. They are [REDACTED]

STATINTL

STATINTL

Throughout the history of this Agency, women have had a significant role in all phases of intelligence activity. Our candidates this year reflect this diversity of background and experience. [REDACTED] has served the Agency since its inception in 1947 and has risen through a series of increasingly responsible positions in developing guidance and overseeing the collection of intelligence, particularly in the scientific and technical fields. The Agency career of [REDACTED] began in 1963 and in this relatively short span of time she has established a remarkable record of achievement in three distinct areas of intelligence work with our Operations Directorate, our Intelligence Directorate and the National Intelligence Officer system. By contrast, [REDACTED] has concentrated her exceptional organizational talent during nearly her entire Agency career of twenty-four years to the management of the operational programs of our largest geographical area.

STATINTL

In an organization such as the CIA, it is all too seldom that our employees can be given the public recognition for their accomplishments which many of them so richly deserve.

I am convinced that [REDACTED] particularly deserving of such honor and am, therefore, very pleased to nominate them for the Federal Woman's Award.

STATINTL After working briefly for the British War Relief Society, Miss STATINTL [ ] joined the Office of Strategic Services (OSS) in 1942 as secretary STATINTL to its Chief, General William E. Donovan. She served with OSS in Washington, [ ] Following the termination of OSS, [ ] continued with other predecessors of CIA, joining the latter agency at its inception in 1947 as a GS-07. In succeeding years she was engaged in increasingly responsible work, progressing to GS-18 in 1975; the only woman of that rank in CIA. As early as 1951 [ ] had become chief of the CIA staff concerned with developing guidance and overseeing collection of scientific and technical clandestine intelligence. She pioneered in this arcane but highly important field, organizing and coordinating world-wide programs. In 1965 she was selected to be the CIA representative on the interagency Critical Collection Problems Committee (CCPC) of the United States Intelligence Board (USIB). This committee has been involved in the preparation of several studies focused on matters of highest national priority in the field of military defense which have been of direct interest to the White House. While acting as STATINTL Chairman of the Committee, [ ] designed and directed a priority and highly acclaimed study of the anti-ship missile threat which focused national attention and provided the supportive documentation

STATINTL Because of Security restrictions it is not possible to describe explicitly many of the honors given [ ] However, the following

(9) DETAILED STATEMENT OF BASIS FOR NOMINATION (INCLUDING PERTINENT PERSONAL QUALITIES, SCOPE OF INFLUENCE ON ACTIVITIES BOTH WITHIN AND OUTSIDE THE AGENCY, ETC.):

STATINTL The nomination of [ ] is based on her continuous record STATINTL of distinguished service since 1942. [ ] has played a key role in the U.S. government intelligence collection effort since World War II. She has a unique understanding of CIA and its missions as well as of the U.S. intelligence community at large. Her broad gauge approach to intelligence community problems combined with her managerial and executive capabilities have contributed greatly to national intelligence objectives of priority importance. In her work with the USIB Critical Collection Problems Committee, working closely with senior civilian and military intelligence agency representatives (ranging from GS-15 to Rear Admirals and Major STATINTL Generals), [ ] has excelled in an ability to resolve diverse and often nearly intransigent opinions. She has been a prime force in melding contributions from the entire intelligence community and developing them into integrated, well written, and constructive studies on priority matters of national interest, frequently in the field of national defense.

(7) Highlights of Work Experience (continued)

STATINTL for subsequent assignment of the highest national priority to this problem. In a letter to the Director of CIA, the Commander of the Naval Intelligence Command commended [ ] efforts and said among other things that her "complete dedication, balanced sense of humor, impartial judgment and above all her exceptional managerial talents were largely responsible for the effective synthesis of the efforts of the various members of the working group, each of whom brought to the working table diverse experience and professional specialities." In addition to her STATINTL work with the CCPC, [ ] has regularly represented CIA on STATINTL other high level interdepartmental working groups on intelligence issues. In March 1973 [ ] was formally named Acting Chairman of the CCPC and continues to serve in that capacity.
STATINTL In addition to her heavy responsibilities with the CCPC, Miss [ ] was appointed in January 1972 Deputy Chief of one of the Agency's senior staffs. In 1975 she was named Chief of this staff. This staff, consisting of 139 employees, is responsible for a variety of diverse activities concerning guidance, coordination, and collection of clandestine intelligence. This staff is of critical importance to the Operations Directorate of the Agency.

(8) Honors Received (continued)

Commendation 1954 from a Staff chief within the Agency for valuable contributions made by members of [ ] staff in the analysis of intelligence materials. STATINTL

Commendation 1961 for the outstanding manner in which [ ] organized and conducted a very sensitive operational task force. STATINTL

STATINTL Commendation 1965 from an Agency Staff Long Range Planning Officer for [ ] assistance in preparing an Agency directorate study. Endorsed by the Chairman of CCPC.

Appreciation 1971 from Chairman, USIB for support given to work of CCPC during several years of his Chairmanship.

Letter of Appreciation 1972 from Commander, Naval Intelligence Command for the outstanding and highly professional support rendered to the U.S. Navy by [ ] Endorsed by the Director of Central Intelligence. STATINTL

(9) Detailed statement of basis for nomination (continued)

STATINTL In addition to her interagency activities, [ ] has made an especially vital contribution to the CIA through her work on intelligence collection problems and her expertise in intelligence community matters. The latter knowledge and experience was especially valuable to the CIA in a period in 1970 and 1971 which involved reorganization of the intelligence community and drafting of new directives. Recognition should also be given to [ ] continuing efforts to increase opportunities for women in the CIA career service and in furthering the principles of Equal Employment Opportunity. The sensitive nature of [ ] work makes a detailed discussion of her many accomplishments impossible. That she is regarded with high esteem not only by this Agency but by the intelligence community as well is attested to by commendations from outside CIA such as that cited above. We believe that [ ] STATINTL record of 34 years of exceptional service as a professional intelligence officer unquestionably warrants the public acknowledgement which this award confers.

(5) SUMMARY OF PRINCIPAL ACHIEVEMENTS IN THIS AGENCY (NOT TO EXCEED 150 WORDS):

STATINTL [ ] thirteen years in CIA have been marked by three principal achievements. First, in eight years with the Operations Directorate she compiled an enviable record of accomplishment, in both Washington and the field. During this stage, increasing responsibilities were rapidly conferred upon her. Second, [ ] demonstrated a remarkable facility in a three-year assignment in STATINTL the Intelligence Directorate, where she quickly became a senior analyst, first in research and then in current intelligence, on Soviet affairs.

STATINTL Third, [ ] over the last two years has applied this unusual combination of experience, along with her own outstanding gifts, to the challenging tasks of the National Intelligence Officer system. As Assistant NIO/USSR and Eastern Europe, she has played a key role in creating a community of Soviet analysts among the intelligence agencies, promoting cooperation between collectors and producers, and making their work responsive to governmental policy concerns.

She quickly proved expert in analyzing how individual field components could most effectively help in collecting priority national intelligence and in providing them with specific guidance. During this period her supervisor awarded her the only "Outstanding" annual evaluation he had ever conferred. [ ] subsequent three years of overseas work cannot be described in detail. They centered on direct involvement in collection, and she continued to display exceptional imagination, energy, and judgment.

STATINTL

In 1971 [ ] transferred -- an unusual step in this compartmented Agency -- to the production of finished intelligence, first as a political researcher and then as a current intelligence officer. In the first of these capacities, she produced excellent studies on the role of the KGB in the USSR and on the Soviet military-industrial complex, each of which remains the best work extant on these topics. In the second, she immediately established a fine reputation for quick, incisive analysis and writing. From her previous work she brought to these assignments a keen appreciation of the Soviet system, (continued on attached)

Numerous Commendations and Expressions of Appreciation from Agency officials for specific accomplishments.

(9) DETAILED STATEMENT OF BASIS FOR NOMINATION (INCLUDING PERTINENT PERSONAL QUALITIES, SCOPE OF INFLUENCE ON ACTIVITIES BOTH WITHIN AND OUTSIDE THE AGENCY, ETC.):

STATINTL

The nomination of [ ] is based upon outstanding service throughout her career with this Agency. She has earned an unusual degree of esteem from all her colleagues in her various assignments, and they have themselves been stimulated by her example of dedication, initiative, imagination, and unfailing cheerfulness. Her performance in her present assignment is a natural culmination of the personal and professional qualities that she has brought to and developed in an intelligence career. Her contribution to the creation of the National Intelligence Officer system is particularly noteworthy, but she has proven herself capable of outstanding performance in all aspects of her profession.

which she effectively shared with others. In an analytic team, she provided an unending stream of ideas and suggestions to her fellow analysts.

STATINTL

[ ] was thus a natural choice, when the National Intelligence Officer system was created in 1973, for the job of Assistant NIO/USSR and Eastern Europe. Her approach to this new task has been highly creative. She has made a key and continuing contribution to the effort to vitalize the intelligence community in support of priority national policy concerns. Her personal qualities -- particularly her ability to enlist the cooperation of others and stimulate their best efforts -- have been as important to this achievement as her professional qualifications. She is in large measure responsible for the formal and informal structures and the wide network of contacts among intelligence officers and their policymaking consumers which have now been brought into being.

In this role she has been the principal architect and monitor of programs and resource requirements in the Agency's largest geographic division. The programs under her oversight have encompassed most of the major foreign policy issues of the recent past, including matters of extreme sensitivity in both a political and operational sense.  STATINTL [REDACTED] has the rare ability to diagnose a management system and spot flaws while the system is still in theoretic form, thus avoiding costly efforts which result from having to correct actual systems in operation. Her inventiveness in improving techniques concerned with budgeting and programming have made an extraordinary contribution to Agency efficiency. STATINTL After working from 1946 to 1952 as a secretary in the Department of Agriculture, [ ] joined this Agency in April 1952. Her career falls into three phases involving a steady increase in the scope of her responsibilities: from 1952 to 1954 she was an analyst in the economic warfare field. In the next period, from 1954 to 1964, she was the coordinator for all covert action programs in the East Asia area. In 1964 her responsibilities were expanded to take in the management of all operational programs in that geographical area, intelligence collection and counterintelligence as well as covert action. This has been a task of major scope, since East Asia is the Directorate's largest geographical division in terms of personnel and has had responsibility, in addition to normal functions, for the Agency's overall [ ] programs. STATINTL plus, during [ ] tenure, sustained crisis situations in Vietnam and [ ] involving major investments of personnel and funds. STATINTL While it is not possible to describe [ ] duties in detail, they have involved drawing up annual budgets for all Division activities; forecasting requirements for future budgets; performing constant review and issuing guidance daily on individual cases to assure that these programs are complied with or, when appropriate, revised; and devising new methods for performing these functions with maximum efficiency and precision yet minimizing the person-hours required for the purpose. CIA Achievement Award for $2,000 in 1973 (shared with another employee) for advanced country-based programming concept.

Also, several Quality Step Increases and numerous commendations from her superiors in East Asia Division.

(9) DETAILED STATEMENT OF BASIS FOR NOMINATION (INCLUDING PERTINENT PERSONAL QUALITIES, SCOPE OF INFLUENCE ON ACTIVITIES BOTH WITHIN AND OUTSIDE THE AGENCY, ETC.):

STATINTL The nomination of [ ] is based on three factors: (1) her sustained superior performance, as detailed in paragraph 7 above; (2) the substantial monetary savings to the U. S. Government achieved by the budgetary processes devised and managed by her; and (3) the pioneering nature of her work in the budgetary/planning field. The last factor is perhaps the crucial one. Partly because of its sheer size (involving management of thousands of employees and hundreds of millions of dollars), the Directorate's East Asia budget has required an exceptional degree of close management. [ ] has provided this in an outstanding manner. There were no precedents or tested guidelines for this process, and so she was obliged to devise her own methodology applying basic principles of planning, programming and budgeting and management by objectives to the operational requirements of her Division. Her success in this not only accomplished the immediate purpose, but also led to emulation of her techniques in other Divisions and in the Agency's Operations Directorate generally. /continued/

STATINTL In a role which is strewn with temptations to fall into the routine, [ ] has been truly a creative performance; and in the more than a decade during which she has been engaged in our overall programming, her conscientiousness, enthusiasm, and outgoing helpfulness to co-workers at all levels in the Division has never flagged.

STATINTL [ ] is the sort of role which is absolutely essential to professional management of the work of a major Government entity, yet which is really only noticed when there is a lapse in consistency of quality of performance. It can be flatly stated that there have STATINTL been no such lapses in [ ] performance. At all times she has demonstrated a high degree of personal integrity, honesty, judgment, and creativity in improving the effectiveness and efficiency of programs under her direction. The unsung nature of her role is in itself an argument for according her superb contribution special recognition.

Dear Mr. Bush:

As Chairman of the Board of Trustees for the Federal Woman's Award, I am pleased to extend to you an invitation to submit nominations from your organization for the 16th annual Federal Woman's Award, to be presented in October 1976 in Washington, D.C.

✓ The vigorous interest in the Federal Woman's Award program shown each year by the President and by heads of organizations has played an important role in its success. The program offers a valuable opportunity to pay high tribute and to focus nationwide attention on the accomplishments of your exemplary career women. I am sure you will want to start immediately on the staff work that will lead to nomination of outstanding candidates from your field offices, as well as your Washington headquarters.

We would like to remind the organizations that there are no restrictions with regard to the age of women nominees. While young women may not have had lengthy careers, some of their contributions are very significant. The Board is also conscious of the fact that the vast majority of nominations are women in the upper grade levels and we would like to point out that women who have attained a rank equivalent to grade GS-9 or above are eligible. We would also like to remind the organizations that there is no limitation on how often women may be nominated by their respective organizations, provided they have not been a recipient of the award previously.

The closing date for receipt of nominations is May 28. A sample nomination form, eligibility requirements, and criteria to be used in making selections from among your women staff members are enclosed for your information. Cordially,

MEMORANDUM FOR: Deputy Director for Administration

Jack:

STATINTL

1. [ ] letter does not reflect any well developed concept of what he proposes to do. I get three points out of the letter:

--That some undefined effort be made to establish a "forum" for the "debate" of the role of intelligence in American foreign policy and national life.

--That this forum be located at the JFK School of Politics at Harvard.

--That this effort be "private and personal, separate from any official connection with the Agency."

2. As to the first point, I am in favor of more academic study of intelligence and I think that the Agency should be prepared to cooperate with any good university that wishes to establish course work or research programs in this field. By cooperating, I mean providing unclassified materials, advice, and guest speakers. I do not include financial assistance or control.

3. As to the second point, Harvard is obviously a more prestigious institution than most for this kind of work. However, it is Harvard which would have to make the decision to establish this sort of program, not the Agency. In this respect, the Agency should not take the lead, but should be responsive to requests for advice, materials, etc.

STATINTL

4. As to the third point, [ ] says the effort should be private and personal, separate from any official connection with the Agency. I recommend that we take him at this word and wait and see what develops.

MEMORANDUM FOR: WEN

I asked [ ] on 17 February for an amplification of his ideas for a memorial to [ ]. He said that he had pretty much abandoned the idea of a forum/discussion of intelligence at Harvard, in part because the Harvard vice president for alumni affairs is not sure the idea can be implemented. Chris is presently thinking about scholarship possibilities in [ ] name, either at Harvard or, better, at CIA. Chris has been in touch with [ ] on the scholarship matter.

If you agree, I will send the above to Mr. Blake with whatever comments you would like to add.

Dear Bill,

Before you go:

STATINTL

Thank you for letting me join you in saying something when you gave [ ] the Distinguished Intelligence Cross for Dick. It was the best that I could do to mark a very special friendship of 28 years. But it was not my farewell, for the friendship will endure in many ways, and there is much left to do on Dick's behalf. We are all in some measure his surrogates.

STATINTL

I have written to [ ]

STATINTL

[ ] to get his views on considering the role of intelligence in American foreign policy and national life in a Harvard forum as one way to commemorate Dick's life. Chase had called Dave McGrath before the funeral to express the hope that Harvard would be represented, as indeed it was. The JFK School of Politics might be the appropriate place for such a forum. I would like to keep you advised of progress in this, for I -- and I know [ ] as well -- would hope you would participate in whatever endeavor evolves. My feeling is that there would be no better location for such a debate, given Dick's devotion to Harvard and Harvard's commitment to thoughtful debate of intelligent controversy. And I think the endeavor should be private and personal, separate from any official connection with the Agency. My guess is that you and George Bush and Bill Nelson would agree.

STATINTL

I have seen [ ] frequently in the last several days, and she is looking resolutely to the future. She is a sturdy person, though she says she still finds the nights and sleeping to be hard. She much looks forward to coming to work with us, and to establishing a household for herself and Dick's great-hearted father. Of the many things that happened during the days after Dick's death, I think nothing touched her more than the visit you and your wife made to her while she was in Georgetown Hospital.

For your own future, Bill: I and so many other colleagues watch your departure with regret, regret that you never really had an opportunity to manage the Agency as you would have wished. We give you our gratitude for your magnanimity of spirit in confronting the mixed legacy of others, keeping the Agency and tomorrow -- not self-exculpation and yesterday -- central to your purpose.

Sincerely,

[ ] STATINTL
